Last night, my mom and dad attended an athletic board meeting, and they let me come with them. The room was filled with a committee of parents and an audience of student athletes. I got to sit next to my best friend, James. James and I listened as the panel of board members discussed whether or not to add more basketball hoops in the school gym. We wanted to shout, "Yes, yes!" but we had to listen quietly. In the end, the panel of board members voted "yes". Now I can't wait to play basketball at school!

Bruce told me about the time he and his friends walked through an abandoned house down the street. He said, "It was the weirdest house I have ever been in! First of all, we found a huge colony of ants crawling throughout the entire house, even in the attic! The house had four flights of stairs. We didn't even try going down the one that leads into the basement." Bruce ended with, "By far the weirdest thing about that old house were the groups of collectible items. They weren't even cool things like baseball cards or movies. The person who lived there collected glass jars, picture frames, and packs of cards!"

My little sister, Amy, was drawing a picture the other day. I asked, "What are you drawing?" Amy is only four years old. She said, "I'm drawing a caravan of cars going on a safari in Africa." I wondered where she had learned some of these big words. Amy continued explaining her drawing, "This pride of lions is protecting the people on safari from a gang of robbers who wants to take their money." Amy sure has a great imagination!
